Dr. [redacted] Pine Ridge Hospital, advised that he was the physician who attended Marshal LLOYD GRIMM when he was brought to that hospital on March 26, 1973.

b7C

He stated he made a preliminary examination only and recommended that Marshal GRIMM be taken to Fitzsimmons Army Hospital at Aurora, Colorado, inasmuch as they did not have the facilities to care for him at Pine Ridge. He stated that based on his preliminary examination it appeared that the bullet entered his chest near the right nipple and exited to the left of the second lumbar vertebra in the back. He stated that it must have been a steel case shell inasmuch as the hole it made upon entry was nearly the same size as the hole it made upon exiting. He stated this appeared to be a small caliber shell.

He stated that during his preliminary examination he determined that Marshal GRIMM was paralyzed in both legs and had no feeling below his navel, which would be consistent with an injury to the nerves in the area where the shell exited. He also advised that he had received second-hand information indicating that there were shell fragments lodged near the spine.

[redacted] South Dakota National Guard, Rapid City, South

The maximum effective range for a 30-06 rifle is 600 yards. This distance takes into consideration either the use of a high-powered scope or the open-peep sight.

[redacted] advised that there is no way a 30-06 rifle could be fired at a target 1,266 yards away and expect any degree of accuracy. After the projectile travels 600 yards it becomes very unstable.

If a target was hit from a distance of 1,266 yards firing a 30-06 rifle, it would be a result of a "lobbing shot" and a very "freak shot".

Specimens received 3/14/73

Q1-Q4 Four Vacutainer vials containing liquid

Result of examination:

The liquids in specimens Q1 and Q2 were identified as gasoline.

The liquids in specimens Q3 and Q4 were found to consist of approximately 75 percent gasoline. The remaining portions consist of an oil containing pentachlorophenol. Pentachlorophenol is reported to find use as a wood preservative.

The Q18 .243 Winchester caliber Remington-Peters cartridge case bears some microscopic marks for comparison purposes.

The .303 British caliber Remington-Peters cartridge case bears some marks of possible value for comparison purposes.

The primer in the Q20 .300 Weatherby Magnum caliber Weatherby cartridge case is unfired.

The Q21 and Q22 7.62 x 39mm cartridges were manufactured by Valtion Patruunatohdas at Lapua, Finland. These cartridge cases do not bear sufficient microscopic marks for identification purposes. It is pointed out that these cartridge cases are the same as those comprising the K1 and K2 cartridges.

The K3 through K6 .223 Remington caliber cartridges were manufactured by an unknown company in Singapore.

The K7 .45 Auto caliber Western cartridge and the K8 .38 Special Amron cartridge are American made.

All of the submitted evidence is being returned to your office under separate cover by Air Express.

2. A summary of what is depicted on all photographs, including aerial and long-range photographs, which were not viewed by defense counsel and Mr. [redacted] on November 19 and 20, 1973, in Rapid City, South Dakota.

All photographs have been viewed by defense counsel and U. S. Attorney's Office which are in the possession of the FBI. Also photographs and films of Molotov cocktails have been viewed in St. Paul on December 17 and 18, 1973, by defense counsel and U. S. Attorney's Office, Sioux Falls.

REQUEST OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY'S OFFICE

Reference U. S. Attorney's letter to Federal Bureau of Investigation, Minneapolis, Minnesota, dated December 3, 1973.

REQUEST NUMBER

THREE

The substance of the contents of all tapes or other recordings identified by Defense Counsel to Mr. [] of our office and Mr. ENLOW on November 19, 1973, in Rapid City, as being tapes or recordings which they wanted to listen to (this refers to tapes seized pursuant to arrest or search).

A review of MP 70-6832 revealed that serials 3853 and 3878 refer to the viewing of items of evidence by the Wounded Knee Legal Defense/Offense Committee on November 19, 1973, at Rapid City, South Dakota. A request was made at that time to listen to recording tapes inventoried under the following bulky exhibit control numbers, 70-6832, 1B, 105, 127, 133, and 176.

1B 105

Plastic envelope containing miscellaneous ammunition and one memorex 90 tape.

A review of this tape revealed that it is blank.

1B 127

Plastic envelope containing three tapes.

A review of these tapes revealed that all three were recordings of what appeared to be Indian Religious Ceremonies; drums beating, Indians chanting, and a male voice speaking what appeared to be an Indian dialect

MP 70-6832 SUB P
WJM:11
(2*)

Cassette tape titled "RUSS STILL BULL SHITTING". Side one and two.

A review of this tape revealed a male voice, probably RUSSELL MEANS, being interviewed by an unknown reporter. There were several other unknown male and female voices that participated in the conversation. This conversation was rambling and covered items such as the Bureau of Indian (BIA) Building takeover in Washington, D.C., and general philosophical discussions. It also gave the impression that the group was drinking and the conversation was interrupted by laughter at many points. There did not appear to be any reference to the Wounded Knee takeover.

Scotch video tape.

Editing reveals scenes of people within Wounded Knee and scenes of negotiation meeting within tepee at Wounded Knee.

4. The results of examination and further processing of all items of evidence secured by Special Agents in early June when representatives of the U. S. Attorney's Office examined a variety of tangible objects stored in Deadwood, South Dakota, in custody of the U. S. Marshal.

The results of these examinations can be located in Minneapolis report of [redacted] dated November 9, 1973. This report is a consolidation of all evidence in the possession of the FBI and the U. S. Marshal's Office.

Specimens received 5/15/73:

Q1 Bullet

Result of examination:

Specimen Q1 is a .25-06 Remington caliber "Positive Expanding Point" bullet of Winchester-Western manufacture. This bullet has been fired from a barrel having six lands and grooves, right twist. The rifling impressions in this bullet are the same as those produced by Remington and Ruger rifles. However, there are not sufficient microscopic marks remaining on this bullet to identify the weapon from which it was fired.

The following information concerns the death and autopsy reports of FRANK J. STILLWATER:

[redacted] Indian Health Service, Indian Hospital, Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, supplied the following information:

b7C

Dr. [redacted] on the morning of April 17, 1973, and at approximately 10:15 a.m., a male individual, believed to be an Indian, was brought to the Emergency Room via helicopter, from Wounded Knee, South Dakota, where he was allegedly shot in the head. Dr. [redacted] stated that he has no descriptive information regarding this individual and by his basic appearance believes him to be an Indian; however, he does not know if this individual is an enrolled member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe.

Dr. [redacted] estimated that this individual is in his 30's and stated that he has black, straight hair and dark eyes, height and weight unknown.

b7C

Dr. [redacted] stated that he inspected the individual's wound and described it as an "avulsion of the scalp and skull." The Doctor stated that in layman's terms this means that the gunshot caused the back of the individual's head to be blown off. He stated that he could not pinpoint the exact location of the entrance wound; however, is certain that it was at the back or side of the skull. He stated that there is no exit wound and the possibility exists that the bullet may still be lodged in the brain. He stated that the individual's condition is very critical and does not, in his opinion, believe the individual will live. He stated that there is extreme brain damage and the prognosis is very poor.

Dr. [redacted] stated that he did everything for the individual that he could and had made arrangements for transportation of the individual to Rapid City, South Dakota, where one Dr. [redacted] would operate.

Dr. [redacted] stated that it would be very important for Dr. [redacted] to have information regarding this individual's prior health history and that he would attempt to obtain [redacted] was interviewed [redacted] 1010 9th Street. Dr. [redacted] was apprised of the identity of the interviewing agent and was told the purpose of the interview.

b7C

Dr. [redacted] related he conducted an autopsy on FRANK J. STILLWATER on April 25, 1973, and he furnished a copy of his Pathological Summary. Dr. [redacted] was displayed several colored slide photographs taken by himself before and during the autopsy. If any of this material is to be used in court, a subpoena duces tecum should be directed to Dr. [redacted]

b7C

Dr. [redacted] was displayed four X-ray photographs which he explained were taken by St. John's Hospital, Radiology Department. These X-rays were of STILLWATER's head and chest, and were taken upon STILLWATER's admission to the hospital and before surgery. A subpoena duces tecum should be issued to St. John's Hospital, Rapid City, South Dakota, for these X-rays.

b7C

Dr. [redacted] advised that he could not definitely conclude the injuries to STILLWATER's head was the result of a shot. If the injury was caused by a shot, it was Dr. [redacted] conclusion it was a grazing shot and was made by a special military or hard jacketed type ammunition. The X-rays and Dr. [redacted] autopsy failed to identify any foreign material in the cranium.

Dr. [redacted] advised his report on the microscopic analysis of this autopsy is not complete. This report would contain only microscopic analysis and tissue and bone taken during the autopsy and would reflect nothing further as to the cause of the injury. This report will be available in the near future.

Sergeant [redacted] walked to the side of the car and reached to the area where it seemed this object was last passed. At this location, behind one of the rear seat passengers, a .38 caliber revolver was recovered. At this point, [redacted] commanded that all six occupants of the car get out of the car. At this point, the vehicle interior was searched for additional weapons. This search resulted in the recovery of a .22 caliber rifle. The rifle was located on the floor in the back seat.

He cannot remember the day, but it was one day last week he met other people at [redacted] home in Denver, Colorado. At the time he went there, he did not have a gun, but later determined he was going with them, to take off to a destination he did not know. After this, he went to his own home to obtain extra clothing. At that point he decided to take his gun, a .38 caliber Røhm revolver with him. In addition to the gun, he also took a box of .38 caliber cartridges. That night he returned to [redacted] home and stayed overnight. The following morning, they left Denver, Colorado, in the white Chevrolet sedan. At that time, the other people with him were the same ones arrested with him in Durango, Colorado.

They left Denver and drove to Window Rock, Arizona. The purpose for the trip was to attend an American Indian Movement meeting. Just outside of Window Rock, Arizona, he decided to leave the group. He felt that the Indians would not welcome him at the American Indian Movement (AIM) meeting.

After leaving the group at Window Rock, he walked around the woods nearby. He had the gun with him at this time and during this walk he met two Indian men. He allowed them to borrow his gun and they, the two Indian men, walked around a small hill and began shooting the gun. During this time he was drinking beer. About an hour later, the two Indian men returned his gun to him.

From Window Rock, he walked and hitchhiked until he got into Northern New Mexico near the Colorado Border. Some place in this area, [redacted] along with the rest of the group picked him up. From this point they drove on into Colorado through Durango, and then a short time later were stopped by the Colorado State Patrol and arrested.

During the trip from Denver to Window Rock, Arizona and again the trip from Northern New Mexico and until they were stopped by the Colorado State Patrol, he attempted to hide his revolver from the other occupants in the car. To the best of his knowledge, none of them knew that he had the revolver. When the police stopped the car, he kicked the gun under something on the floor and then picked it up and then put it behind his back.

[redacted] was asked how the serial number to the gun had been removed. [redacted] advised that to the best of his knowledge the serial number was still on the gun when he left Denver, Colorado. He stated that it must have been the two Indian men who borrowed the gun in the hills at Window Rock, Arizona, who removed the serial number.

[redacted] was then asked if he had brandished the gun out the car window or if he had seen anyone in the car brandishing the .22 rifle. [redacted] stated while he was hitchhiking he drank numerous cans of beer and also while riding in the car he continued drinking beer. He stated that he was intoxicated during the trip through Colorado and that he was not aware of anyone brandishing a gun or shooting.

[redacted] was asked how it was that when arrested near Bayfield, Colorado, he was in the same car with the same occupants as when he left Denver, Colorado. He stated that while he was hitchhiking through New Mexico, he had it in his mind that possibly [redacted] and the group may be taking the same route back to Denver, Colorado. He stated it was just a coincidence that this same group of people were driving the same route and were able to pick him up.

[redacted] stated that he has been having trouble with individuals in Denver, Colorado. Specifically he has received threats from a [redacted] and therefore either in May or June of 1973, he purchased a .38 caliber Rohm revolver from Keystone Jewelry Store on Broadway in Denver, Colorado. This gun was then registered and he, [redacted] has a registration at his home in Denver, Colorado.

b6

During the Indian confrontation at Wounded Knee, South Dakota, he became curious. He was well aware of the warnings given that curious individuals should not go to Wounded Knee. He disregarded these warnings and at Wounded Knee, unknown to him, he was with a group of people who had in their possession numerous guns. Even though he did not know these guns were in their possession, he was arrested. After this arrest, he was released on a Personal Recognizance Bond.

[redacted] was asked first of all, if the gun a .38 caliber Rohm, was his gun, and for an explanation, regarding serial number removal. [redacted] stated that he knew that the .38 caliber Rohm revolver was his because one of the screws in the grip was loose and he recognized some chips on the grips near the hammer. He stated that he did not remove the serial number from the gun and as far as he is concerned, the two Indian men in Arizona, must have removed the serial number. [redacted] stated that he did not take notice of that particular part of the gun when the gun was returned to him.

[redacted] RIEGERT was apprised of the identity of the interviewing agents and was told he was being interviewed about his association with the Wounded Knee Museum and his observations on and subsequent to February 27, 1973.

RIEGERT advised he is an enrolled Chippewa at Bemidji, Minnesota. RIEGERT is 1/8 Indian and was born January 25, 1892, at Mt. Iron, Minnesota. RIEGERT was educated in Indian schools and graduated from Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kansas, in 1915. RIEGERT moved to Kyle, South Dakota, in 1951, living at Kyle until moving to Wounded Knee in 1958. While residing at Kyle he was Postmaster and became associated with CLYDE and AGNES GILDERSLEEVE.

In 1958, RIEGERT started the Wounded Knee Museum. The museum included the consolidated collections of RIEGERT, the GILDERSLEEVES, and Dr. [redacted] RIEGERT started his collection in 1932 at the Cheyenne Indian Agency. RIEGERT collected his own history and researched along the Missouri and Cheyenne Rivers, and Cherry Creek. He bought some of his items from the Indians such as axes, tomshawks, and wedges. He also purchased items from areas which he could not research.

by his daughter because of the shooting. She explained to him several individuals were shooting up and looting the Trading Post and the museum.

Approximately 20 minutes to 10 p.m., someone yelled from outside the [redacted] home "come out with your hands up or we'll burn the building down." Someone broke one of the rear windows in the [redacted] home as the crowd gathered outside the residence. [redacted] went out of the house with their hands up.

RIEGERT was still in bed. [redacted] returned and put RIEGERT in his wheelchair and took him to CLYDE GILDERSLEEVE's house. When RIEGERT was taken out of the [redacted] house, he saw the activity at the Trading Post. He observed 1/2 dozen individuals parading in front of the Trading Post with rifles.

Two Indian males escorted them to the GILDERSLEEVE's house. The first one was apparently in command and was about 30 years of age. He was armed with an automatic weapon and from the way he handled the weapon, indicated to RIEGERT he knew how to use the rifle. The second was in his 20's and was armed with a revolver. They said they were taking over and "not only said it but proved it." They were told by their assailants that they would not bother their personal belongings, they just wanted to use their place.

There were always several guards in and out of the GILDERSLEEVE house and there was one guard in the room with RIEGERT. Everyone used the bathroom to suit themselves. Everyone stayed in the GILDERSLEEVE house for the remainder of their time in Wounded Knee.

During the days that ensued, RIEGERT became acquainted with several of the people involved in the takeover of Wounded Knee and recalled several experiences.

RIEGERT explained they took his car and the GILDERSLEEVE car and used these vehicles for their convenience. They used the car to haul articles from the store and the museum to the Catholic church on the hill. RIEGERT saw the cars traveling back and forth between these places. RIEGERT described his car as a 1959 Chevrolet, in excellent mechanical condition. He displayed South Dakota title number J14476, which reflected a 1959 Chevrolet, Vehicle Identification Number (VIN) F59K100366, registered to WILBUR A. RIEGERT, Wounded Knee, South Dakota. This vehicle was further described as an Impala sports sedan, four door. On the way out of Wounded Knee this car was pointed out to RIEGERT along the Big Foot Road to Pine Ridge, and it had been wrecked.

On the second or third day while in a conversation with two of the individuals involved in the takeover, it was related to RIEGERT that these two individuals were related to a [REDACTED] RIEGERT explained [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] RIEGERT is also [REDACTED] RIEGERT determined that these two individuals were brothers and were from the Minneapolis area. The older brother was 27 to 28 years of age and was an express member of the American Indian Movement (AIM). It was related to RIEGERT that the younger brother was discouraged from going into Wounded Knee by his parents, but this brother wanted to be with the older brother, so joined him at Wounded Knee.

On one occasion, RIEGERT had conversation with CARTER CAMP. CAMP was in the GILDERSLEEVE house armed with a revolver and acting as a guard. He knew this individual to be CAMP as his name came out in conversation and the minute CAMP's identity was determined, CLYDE GILDERSLEEVE wrote CAMP's name on a piece of paper and slid it between the cushions on the couch. RIEGERT later observed the name on this piece of paper. RIEGERT asked CAMP why he was allowing the stripping of the Trading Post to be done. CAMP told RIEGERT he was not out there and was not involved with the people that were doing that. CAMP stated he was there to preserve life and was not interested in what was being taken from the store. CAMP stated they came for guns, ammunition, clothing, food, and a place to stay. CAMP eventually told RIEGERT to shut his mouth or he would shut it for him. CAMP then shut the curtains so RIEGERT could not see out.

The telephone rang and one of the other guards started to answer it. CAMP said he would answer it and did. It appeared to RIEGERT that the caller was a reporter. CAMP asked who it was and apparently the caller asked the same question. CAMP replied it was none of the caller's business.

At one point the hostages were referred to as prisoners of war. RIEGERT explained this resulted from the tense situation outside.

One day RIEGERT wanted to get outside for some air. The guards finally allowed [] to take RIEGERT outside. A guard was standing on each side as they allowed [] to wheel RIEGERT back and forth in front of the GILDERSLEEVE residence.

There was general conversation about the Indian treaties. The individuals involved in the takeover wanted to make Uncle Sam understand these treaties.

At one time they told RIEGERT that they understood he was sick with a heart condition and that there was a car ready for him 24 hours a day. On the third day, RIEGERT and the others held captive were told they were free, but RIEGERT explained they had taken away the only vehicles available and there was no way out.

On another occasion, RIEGERT was lying in his bed resting. Two Indian girls came in and took the pillows from under his head. They took the pillow cases off and RIEGERT understood these pillow cases were to be filled and used for sandbags. RIEGERT said one of these girls was known as JEAN.

At one point they were told the Marshals were coming in and were using gas. Everyone was directed to lie on the floor.

RIEGERT heard many shots fired and felt that the most shots were fired on the first night of the siege. RIEGERT related he did not hear many distant shots as he was usually inside. Most of the shots he heard were fired from the vicinity of the GILDERSLEEVE house and the area of the Trading Post and museum. RIEGERT advised the individuals involved in the takeover took a small strongbox of his which contained stock, a note, personal papers, and several personal items. These items included 50 Buffalo nickels and in excess of 125 listed Indian head pennies, one of which was valued at over $400. The strongbox also contained an ivory cribbage board engraved with Indian historical notations from Alaska.

He understood this cribbage board was recovered at one of the roadblocks. RIEGERT also listed pictures taken in the early 1930's of MARTHA BAD WARRIOR.

On one occasion, RIEGERT talked with PEDRO BISSONETTE. BISSONETTE told them his name and that he was headquartered at Calico (Calico, South Dakota). At one time BISSONETTE put his arms around RIEGERT and said he was sorry for what was going on. On another occasion BISSONETTE came to the house and told everyone they were going to be moved to the church. They refused and BISSONETTE went back to talk with the leaders. BISSONETTE stated they would not be happy with this refusal. He eventually returned and told everyone it was all right to stay at the GILDERSLEEVE's.

On March 7, 1973, RIEGERT and the other captives were told they were leaving Wounded Knee. [redacted] used his car, and RIEGERT left with [redacted] [redacted] There were several photographers and press reporters around when RIEGERT was loaded in the [redacted] car. They left that night and RIEGERT was taken directly to the hospital where he remained for 24 days.

It was observed that RIEGERT is confined to a wheelchair. He stated he was physically and medically capable to testify regarding his observations at Wounded Knee, but it was necessary to have [redacted] with him at all times. RIEGERT advised his doctor was a Dr. [redacted] of [redacted] Nebraska.

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Date of transcription June 15, 1973

LLOYD W. (TOBY) EAGLEBULL, Secretary, Oglala Sioux Tribal Council, Pine Ridge, South Dakota, Indian Reservation, advised as follows:

The history of the political situation which directly led to the takeover of Wounded Knee, South Dakota, by the American Indian Movement (AIM) on February 27, 1973, is directly connected to the political structure of the tribe. The President and Vice President are elected in general Tribal elections which are held in November every two years.

Eight Tribal councilmen are elected by each of the eight districts. Each district votes directly for their representative and in addition the village of Pine Ridge elects a representative; therefore, there are a total of nine councilmen--eight from the Tribal district and one from Pine Ridge. This council system is set up by Tribal constitution and also approved by the Secretary of the United States Department of Interior.

The Secretary of the Tribe is appointed by the Tribal Council. The Treasurer is also appointed by the Tribal Council. [redacted] is an administrative assistant who is appointed by the executive committee. The executive committee is made up of the President, Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer.

RICHARD WILSON, who is known as DICK WILSON, was elected in November of 1971 as Oglala Sioux Tribal President and will run for re-election this fall in November, 1973. After WILSON's election in November, the AIM representatives went to Washington, D. C., and took over the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) building. WILSON did not approve of this act and took a very firm stand against AIM's position. As a result DENNIS BANKS, CLYDE BELLECOURT, VERNON BELLECOURT, and RUSSELL MEANS came into direct opposition with WILSON. MEANS was quoted in the newspaper as wanting to dissolve the council type of Tribal government which was in effect on the Pine Ridge Reservation. Actually the previous-mentioned AIM leaders were greatly angered with WILSON's comments and really desired his removal as well as the dissolvment of the Tribal system of government. MEANS was very interested in running for and gaining the position of Tribal president which was held by WILSON.

As a result of DICK WILSON's stand against AIM and through his encouragement, the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council passed resolution number 7255. This resolution stated that the Oglala Sioux Tribe was against the action of AIM in Washington, D. C. The tribe stated that they did not condone AIM's activities and this served as a trigger for later incidents on the reservation.

They have their ways of getting information. They knew that AIM was going to Scottsbluff, Nebraska, and they also heard of the Custer, South Dakota, situation prior to its occurrence. AIM's leaders are intelligent and they are aware of the history of Custer, the name of the town, and use this for news value.

In addition to his conflict with AIM over the Washington, D. C., situation, WILSON also had individuals on the Tribal Council who, for personal reasons, were out to get him. These council members are [redacted] and HOBART KEITH. After WILSON's comment concerning AIM in Washington, D. C., these three came up with charges in an attempt to impeach WILSON from the office of President. These charges did not amount to anything; and when the impeachment hearing was scheduled, these three council members were not prepared to present the case to the council. They stalled for time and attempted to enforce the 20-day waiting period which is the prerogative of the accused in impeachment proceedings. The accused, DICK WILSON, waived the waiting period and demanded that the charges be immediately brought up on the floor.

The opponents made the charges but they had nothing to back them up at that point. The charges against DICK WILSON were made for almost purely personal reasons. As an example, [redacted] was not legally qualified to run for election and therefore WILSON refused to seat him for a long time. [redacted] was angry with WILSON because WILSON got rid of RICHARD COLHOFF, Superintendent of Police, BIA, Pine Ridge, South Dakota. WILSON was angry with COLHOFF because COLHOFF did not take positive action against AIM. HOBART KEITH also had a battle with WILSON which was strictly a personality clash. After the councilmen could not make the charges stick against

WILSON, KEITH threatened to take the charges into Federal Court. The Tribal Council agreed to do this but no further action was taken.

WILSON also used his authority to suspend Tribal council Vice President DAVE LONG. He suspended him because LONG had sent a telegram to Washington, D. C., in support of the AIM takeover. The telegram stated that the Oglala Sioux Tribe supported AIM action in Washington. WILSON maintained that the Vice President had no authority to commit the Tribe to support AIM's destruction in Washington, D. C.

The suspended Vice President comes from a little community called Calico. In addition to disputing LONG's position on the Washington takeover, WILSON used as a basis for dismissing LONG the fact that he would get drunk and refuse to come to work. LONG is now the President of the Civil Rights Group. LONG's relatives got together and made a statement to the effect that if WILSON suspends LONG they would see that WILSON was taken out of office. They formed a considerable number of the Calico group.

At the same time AARON DE SERSA was here as editor of a newspaper called "Shannon County News." It was a very well read newspaper. He was also in opposition to DICK WILSON and Tribal government of any kind. It was not just the Pine Ridge Reservation where he objected to Tribal government but opposed it on any reservation. He added gas to the flame and sat in on every meeting and stirred the people up. He is pretty good at agitating. They later organized in Manderson, South Dakota, and also went to Procupine, South Dakota, and had the people at each of the districts go to the meetings. The biggest majority of individuals in attendance were people from Calico, South Dakota.

They formed what they called the Inter District Company. There are eight districts on the reservation and they called their movement the Inter District Council. Their main purpose was to get DICK WILSON out of office. Then they ran into opposition from people that were not interested and their Inter District Council movement failed. They came and regrouped again under the title of the Civil Rights Group. This is a nice-sounding name and the people on the reservation are acquainted with the Civil Rights acts. It is an impressive title and they had meetings which were well attended.

At this time it was known that the AIM supporters' long range objective was to find a home on some reservation. They selected the Pine Ridge reservation in South Dakota to establish this base. They took advantage of the fact that there was some pretty hot political activities going on.

In the meantime, PEDRO BISSONETTE got arrested for assaulting a BIA officer and he was placed in jail under a high bond. He was released on bond and at a meeting in Calico, South Dakota, made a statement giving credit to AIM representatives for getting his bond reduced. At the Calico meeting the AIM representative said that they had Oglala Sioux chiefs there. They allegedly invited the AIM people to the reservation. This offer had been extended by members of the AIM group. The situation was all cut and dried. At the same time they were having the meeting at Calico they were having a meeting at Porcupine, South Dakota.

On the night of February 27, 1973, when Wounded Knee was taken over, they were having a meeting at Calico and Porcupine, South Dakota. At the proper time the AIM people told their people at Porcupine, South Dakota, to drive to Calico and join the meeting there. The Calico group started driving to Porcupine where they were told they were going to have a pow wow. So, many people innocently drove off from Calico and Porcupine and met at Wounded Knee. They had planned to take over Wounded Knee because it is a historical place and a lot of people in the United States would fall for this sentimental stuff.

The takeover at Wounded Knee was basically a political struggle which AIM took advantage of. Today it is the same thing politically. There are meetings being held every night and individuals want to overthrow the administration. This is despite the fact there is only a couple of months before another election. There are people that are determined to get rid of DICK WILSON and the Tribal Council.

Indian tribes in the United States have a unique relationship with the United States Government. It is a sort of semi-sovereignty. If revolutionary groups could get control of the Tribal body, they would have a real base. If Tribal government can be overthrown, it would mean a total breakdown in authority on the reservation. The people, as a whole, are very poor moneywise. They have a lot of problems and the Tribal Council is aware of them.

In order for law and order to continue on the reservation, those persons who occupied Wounded Knee should be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. An example must be made of these individuals. Mr. EAGLEBULL [REDACTED] [REDACTED] Colorado, for this violation. He cannot see how anyone involved in Wounded Knee can get by without a sentence.

The people on the reservation have seen the AIM representatives get away with violations and violence at Scottsbluff, Nebraska; Custer, South Dakota; and Washington, D. C. If they get away with their violence at Wounded Knee, no one on the reservation is about to testify against them in the future. If these individuals involved in Wounded Knee are not prosecuted by the Federal Government, then their homes are going to get burned, they will be beaten up somewhere, or stopped on the highway. If the Federal Government does not prosecute these people, the law will be taken into the hands of the residents.

A review of the Minneapolis files is being conducted to identify Agents who participated in firefights from March 10 through May 8, 1973, and also to locate interviews with [redacted] and any other person who may have been fired upon on February 27, 1973, and during any other period of time during the occupation of Wounded Knee. This information will be provided to the U. S. Attorney's Office as soon as it is located and identified.

Tapes for March 9, 24, and 26, 1973, have been duplicated and will be turned over to the defense counsel at the same time that other evidence is made available to them. Tapes during April do not exist inasmuch as during April cassette-type tape units were kept on a daily basis only and a determination was made at the end of each day as to whether or not this tape contained any information which would be of interest in the future and if it was not deemed necessary to keep that cassette, it was erased and reused.

MEMORANDUM TO THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF OGLALA SIOUX NATION

RE: THE KEEPING OF NATIONAL DOCUMENTS, THE ISSUING OF CERTIFICATES OF CITIZENSHIP AND THE ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSIONERS OF SECURITY, TRANSPORTATION, ETC.

1. One of the first duties of an independant sovereign nation is that records of all daily business must be kept on a permanent basis in order to fulfill our obligations to visiting foreign dignitaries and to history and for recording the procedures of our nation.
2. We should begin the enrollment and issuing of certificates of citizenship which would also serve as an international passport.
3. You might consider selecting certain members of the working committee to act as temporary commissioners of Security, transportation, Census, Information, and communications, etc. Further an official recording Secretary should be appointed for the nation. It should be recognized that any official records stolen by a foreign agent be construed as an act of high treason or international espionage.
4. This memorandum is to be duly entered into the records of the NEW OGLALA SIOUX NATION.

This memorandum done in the Community Building located at Porcupine, Signature below:

Meredith Quinn, Internat'l Legal Advisor

Signed this day 11 of March 1973.

[REDACTED]
On February 2, 3, and 4, 1973, the Rapid City Indian Civil Rights Task Force is sponsoring civil rights hearings on racial discrimination in Rapid City, South Dakota.

You will remember me and Dennis Banks, officials with the American Indian Movement, we both met you during the flood in Rapid City. These hearings will bring out the aftermath of the flood, what happened with the flood appropriations monies, and the fact that Affirmative Action Programs are unheard of in Rapid City. I have enclosed three press releases Dennis and myself have made concerning the situation.

If at all possible we would like to see you here for the hearings and have your involvement. The meetings will be monitored by Dennis Banks, National Field Director of A.I.M., the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, [REDACTED] for the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. We have also invited [REDACTED] of NAACP who will be involved from that organization. However, we feel your organization is a truer representation of the black feeling in this country, we want you here at the hearings to help us sensitize this city to a real black organization.

I have also enclosed a letter from the telephone company requesting addition $390.00 dollar deposit, the letter came right after I condemned the telephone company in a news release.

We would like to hear from you and when you will be arriving. I can be reached at the above address or at 605-342-1709.

Gentlemen:

Enclosed are copies of expense reports for Tom Luebben and myself covering our actual expenses in assisting AIM in Rapid City. Total expenses were $402.01.

We just received $125.00 from you toward reimbursement of the above expenses. Contribution of the balance of $277 would be very much appreciated as NALDEF is currently unfunded.

Very truly yours,

MANIFESTO OF THE WOUNDED KNEE AIRLIFT

TO THE INDEPENDENT OGLALA NATION AND THEIR FRIENDS AT WOUNDED KNEE: YOUR STRUGGLE FOR FREEDOM AND JUSTICE IS OUR STRUGGLE. OUR HEARTS ARE WITH YOU.

TO THE PEOPLE OF AMERICA:

The delivery of these packages of food to the courageous people in Wounded Knee is being carried out by a large number of Americans who have worked, and continue to work to end American aggression in Indochina. We look on with horror and dismay as the U.S. Government and President Nixon ignore the lessons of their failure in Vietnam and once again attempt to block the road to justice and self-determination for an independent and freedom-loving people.

It is indeed ironic that our actions are occurring during the concluding days of the Pentagon Papers trial in Los Angeles. Just as those Papers expose the lies and deception of our secret policies in Indochina, Wounded Knee exposes the treacherous treatment of the American Indian. The fight against these policies is a fight against an unyielding and brutal government which makes the poor of the world the victims of its search for power and profit.

It is the responsibility of every patriotic American to contribute to these common goals of dignity and freedom. Our brothers and sisters at Wounded Knee have shown us that the poor in America become the strong and the just in struggle. Those of us in the anti-war movement have much to learn from them, and we must realize that the frustration and disillusionment which we may personally feel are only symptoms of a misunderstanding of our real ability to affect the course of this country's policies. Wounded Knee shows us that just struggles cannot be stopped by any President or any policy.

The buffalos that gave life to the Sioux were killed by American rifles, just as the rice that gives life to the Vietnamese was destroyed by American chemicals and bombs. But the people of Indochina are moving steadily toward freedom and independence, and so too are the people who were the first Americans.

SIX NATIONS COUNCIL OF CHIEFS OF THE IROQUOIS CONFEDERACY

P. O. Box 152

Nedrow, New York

WHY ARE THE INDIANS AT WOUNDED KNEE?

The Six Nations Council of Chiefs of the Iroquois Confederacy, stands in support of our brothers at Wounded Knee.

We find it deplorable that the Native Americans have to risk their very lives to focus attention on the terrible conditions of our people in this country. We cite the poor health conditions, education, welfare, illegal drafting of our people, and the utter disregard for the Treaties that we have paid for with our lives as examples of these conditions.

The issues are national and international, the honor and credibility of the United States is at stake. You should be concerned, all of the people of the United States should be concerned, the President of the United States should be concerned, and further, he should make a statement to that effect. Native Americans should be the top priority of this nation. We number less than 1 per cent of this country's population: now why is it so hard to take care of the obligations to our people that have been promised and promised and promised.

The people at Wounded Knee are making a statement. The question is not what damage of destruction of property has occurred, but why it becomes necessary for our people to have to resort to such extremes to gain some recognition of our desperate situation.

We are a free people. The very dust of our ancestors is steeped in our tradition. This is the greatest gift we gave to you, the concept of freedom. You did not have this. . . now that you have taken it and built a constitution and country around it, you deny freedom to us. There must be some one among you who is concerned for us and if not for us, at least for the honor of your country. In 1976, you are going to have a birthday party proclaiming 200 years of democracy, an hypocritical action. The people of the world would find this laughable.

The solution is simple: be honest, be fair, honor the commitments made by the founding fathers of your country. We are an honorable people. . . can you say the same. You are concerned for the destruction of property at the BIA building and at Wounded Knee. Where is your concern for the destruction of our people, for human lives. Thousands of Pequots, Narragansetts, Mohicans, thousands of Cherokees on the Trail of Tears, Black Hawk's people, Chief Joseph's people, Captain Jack's people, the Navajos, the Apaches, Sand Creek massacre, huddled under an American flag seeking the protection of a promise, Big Foot's people at Wounded Knee. When will you cease your violence against our people. Where is your concern for us?

What about the destruction of our properties? The thousands of square acres of land, inundated by dams built on our properties, the raping of the Hopi and Navajo territories by the Peabody strip mining operations, timber cutting, power companies, water pollution and on and on. Where is your concern for these properties?

The balance of the ledger is up to you. Compare the property damage of the BIA and Wounded Knee against the terrible record and tell us that we are wrong for wanting redress. We ask for justice and not from the muzzle of an M-16 rifle. Now what is to occur?

Remove the marshalls and FBI men. They are hostile and eager to exercise the sanctions of the United States to subjugate the Indian people. Do not prosecute the Indians for the methods used to gain your attention, for the fault actually lies with the government of the United States for ignoring Indian for so long.

Put your energies and money now being expended for the suppression of Indian people at Wounded Knee into a real effort to understand why they are there. And begin here in the capital through an investigation of the BIA, and of the government policies dealing with our most urgent needs.

Reaffirm and respect the treaties entered into between our two peoples.

Put your house in order with respect to our people, so that we may continue to coexist in peace and friendship as our grandfathers and their grandfathers before them tried so hard to do.

Show us you are sincere and remember the Creator loves all life and peoples and favors none above the other.

We have not asked you to give up your religions and beliefs for ours.

We have not asked you to give up your language for ours.

We have not asked you to give up your ways of life for ours.

We have not asked you to give up your government for ours.

We have not asked that you give up your territories to us.

Why can you not accord us the same respect. For your children learn from watching their elders, and if you want your children to do what is right, then it is up to you to set the example.

This is all that we have to say at this moment.

MOTION TO DISMISS

I. Defendants herein move the Court for an order thereof dismissing the following counts of the respective indictments issued against them on the grounds that they each fail to allege facts and/or specify a criminal offense over which the Court has jurisdiction:

- A. 1. Counts III, IV, V, VII and IX of Indictment No. Cr 73-5034 dated March 20, 1973, issued against defendant Dennis Banks.
2. Counts III, IV, V, VII and IX of Indictment No. Cr 73-5035 dated March 20, 1973, issued against defendant Russell Means.
3. Counts I and II of Indictment No. Cr 73-5062 dated April 10, 1973, issued against defendant Dennis Banks.

2. Counts I and II of Indictment No. Cr 73-5063 dated April 10, 1973, issued against defendant Russell Means.

The Court herein lacks jurisdiction due to the following:

The offenses alleged in said counts:

1. Do not arise under the Major Crimes Act, 18 U.S.C. §1153; and
2. Federal criminal jurisdiction under 18 U.S.C. §1152, relative to said counts is precluded because said jurisdiction of U.S. District Court does not extend to:
 - a. "offenses committed by one Indian against a person or property of another Indian;"
 - b. "any Indian committing any offense in Indian country, who has been punished by the local law of the tribe;" or
 - c. "Where, by treaty stipulations, the exclusive jurisdiction over said offenses is or may be secured to the Indian tribes respectively." (18 U.S.C. §1152)

II. The defendants further move the Court to dismiss Count I of the respective aforementioned indictments issued against them on March 20, 1973 on the grounds that it does not set forth an offense included within the Major Crimes Act, 18 U.S.C. §1153, upon which said respective counts purport to be based.

The motions herein are based upon 18 U.S.C. §1152, 18 U.S.C. §1153, the Treaty with the Sioux of 1868, various cases to be cited to the Court, the attached Memorandum and all the files and records herein.

MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF

MOTION TO DISMISS FOR LACK OF JURISDICTION

Defendants have brought a motion to the Court, moving that Counts III, IV, V, VII, and IX of the respective indictments issued against defendants Dennis Banks and Russell Means on or about March 20, 1973, and Counts I and II of the indictment issued against these defendants on or about April 10, 1973, be dismissed due to lack of jurisdiction of the Court.

It is the position of the defendants that the United States District Court has jurisdiction only to try those offenses specifically enumerated in the Major Crimes Act, 18 U.S.C. §1153. None of the counts specified hereinabove are charged under 18 U.S.C. §1153. Defendants also seek the dismissal of Count I of the indictment issued on or about March 20, 1973, since while that count does specify a violation of 18 U.S.C. §1153 and apparently attempts to recite a charge of burglary, it incorporates the law of the State of South Dakota as contained in Section 22-32-9, such statute specifying a crime which is not the common law of burglary.

Defendants base their motions to dismiss on the Court's lack of jurisdiction under the Major Crimes Act, 18 U.S.C. §1153, and further the Court's lack of jurisdiction under 18 U.S.C. §1152, under which the offenses alleged in the counts sought to be dismissed must be applied. 18 U.S.C. §1152 contains express prohibitions against the application of federal criminal law on an Indian reservation in three circumstances, each of which has application to some or all of the counts which defendants seek to have dismissed.

The right to administer justice is one of the inherent rights of an Indian tribe and is one of the various rights encompassed within their broader right of self-government. (Cohen Federal Indian Handbook, p. 122; Cohen Indian Rights in the Federal Courts; 24 M.L.R. 146, p. 147; Powers of Indian Tribes (1934); 55 I.D. 14, pp. 65-67.

Cohen, who has generally been acknowledged as the foremost expert on Indian law, states in his Handbook on Federal Indian Law, (U.S. Dept. of the Interior, 1942) at p. 122:

Perhaps the most basic principle of all Indian law, supported by a host of decisions...is the principle that those powers which are lawfully vested in an Indian tribe are not, in general, delegated powers granted by express acts of Congress, but rather inherent powers of a limited sovereignty which has never been extinguished...the statutes of Congress, then, must be examined to determine the limitations of tribal sovereignty rather than to determine its sources or its positive content. What is not expressly limited remains within the domain of tribal sovereignty.

The status of the Indian nations was first set down by Chief Justice John Marshall in several cases. In Cherokee Nation vs. Georgia, 5 Pet. 17, 8 L. Ed. 25, Chief Justice John Marshall considered the application of the words "nation" and "treaty" to the various Indian people:

The very term 'nation', so generally applied to them (Indians) means 'a people distinct from others.' The Constitution, by declaring treaties already made, as well as those to be made to be the supreme law of the land, has adopted and sanctioned the previous treaties with the Indian nations, and consequently admits their rank among those Powers who are capable of making treaties. The words 'treaty' and 'nation' are words of our own language, selected in our diplomatic and legislative proceedings by ourselves, and have a definite and well-understood meaning. We have applied them to Indians, as we have applied them to the other nations of the earth. They are applied to all in the same sense.

The next year in Worcester vs. Georgia, 31 U.S. 515 (1832), Chief Justice Marshall spoke more directly to the question of Indian status. In that case, it was held that a clergyman had been wrongfully imprisoned by the State of Georgia for attempting to interfere with the State's removal of the Cherokees. It was held that the Cherokees were entitled by sovereign treaty rights and, as a distinct independent political community, to occupy its own territory:

...and the settled doctrine of the law of nations is, that a weaker power does not surrender its independence--its right to self-government--by associating with a stronger, and taking its protection. A weak state, in order to provide for its safety, may place itself under the protection of one more powerful, without stripping itself of the right of government, and ceasing to be a state. Examples of this kind are not wanting in Europe. "Tributary and feudatory states," says Vattel, "do not thereby cease to be sovereign and independent states, so long as self-government, and sovereign and independent authority, are left in the administration of the state." At the present day, more than one state may be considered as holding its right of self-government under the guarantee and protection of one or more allies.

The Cherokee nation, then, is a distinct community, occupying its own territory, with boundaries accurately described, in which the laws of Georgia can have no force, and which the citizens of Georgia have no right to enter, but with the assent of the Cherokees themselves, or in conformity with treaties, and with the acts of congress. The whole intercourse between the United States and this nation, is, by our constitution and laws, vested in the government of the United States. The act of the state of Georgia, under which the plaintiff in error was prosecuted, is, consequently void, and the judgment a nullity.

The lack of state jurisdiction as to the conduct of Indian affairs was made evident in Worcester vs. Georgia, supra. The Court's enunciation that "The Cherokee nation is under the protection of the United States of America, and no other sovereign whatsoever," along with the Court's enunciation of the tribe's sovereignty, decided at an early date that authority relative to Indian affairs rested primarily with the sovereign, i.e., the tribe, and with the federal government to the extent to which the respective tribes had placed themselves under the government's protection by treaty or otherwise.

It has been rather consistently held that except in very special situations, a state has no jurisdiction on an Indian reservation, particularly in affairs which relate to Indian people. Public Law 280 passed in 1953 erodes this principle as to five states, not including South Dakota, 18 U.S.C. §1162. In those five states, criminal jurisdiction is given to the state government. Various cases have held that states do have some criminal jurisdictions on a reservation as to crimes by non-Indians.

Crimes by Indians on an Indian reservation are, in all cases, except in 280 states, reserved exclusively to the law of the tribe, except to the extent tribal jurisdiction has been specifically curtailed with jurisdiction being directed to the federal government.

Relative to crimes on Indian lands "jurisdiction of the federal courts must be based, in every instance upon some applicable statute, since there is no federal common law of crimes." Cohen Handbook of Federal Indian Law, p. 146 (1942).

In 1875, Congress passed a law providing that except as otherwise provided by law, the general federal criminal laws applicable to places within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States (excluding the District of Columbia) shall be in force in Indian country. Certain exceptions to the applicability to such federal statutory criminal laws are expressed, which are of considerable importance. The original legislation incorporating certain portions of pre-existing law is contained in Sections 2145 and 2146 of the revised statutes of 1875, and in the act of February 18, 1875 (18 Stat. 318). A recodification of this legislation occurred on June 25, 1948 (c. 645, 62 Stat. 683, 757). For a history of the applicable sections, see Anderson v. Gladder, 188 F. Supp. 666 (D. Ore. 1960). But this recodification had little substantive change and served to carry forward the prior law. Section 18 U.S.C. §1152 now reads as follows:

Except as otherwise expressly provided by law, the general laws of the United States as to the punishment of offenses committed in any place within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, except the District of Columbia, shall extend to the Indian country.

This section shall not extend to offenses committed by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian, not to any Indian committing any offense in the Indian country, who has been punished by the local law of the tribe, or to any case where, by treaty stipulations, the exclusive jurisdiction over such offenses is or may be secured to the Indian tribes respectively.

Through this legislation, "Congress has provided that federal jurisdiction shall not extend to offenses committed by one Indian against a person or property of another Indian, nor to any Indian committing any offense in Indian country, who has been punished by the local law of the tribe, or to any case where, by treaty stipulation, the exclusive jurisdiction over such offenses is or may be secured to the Indian tribes, respectively." 41 Am. Jur. 2d, 866, Indians, § 60 (1973).

The Federal Criminal Code does not expressly define "place within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States" and has no separate body of sections setting out the criminal code applicable to such places.

The phrase "special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States" is defined in 18 U.S.C. §7(3) (1952) as including:

Any lands reserved or acquired for the use of the United States, and under the exclusive or concurrent jurisdiction thereof...

The general law of the United States as to punishment of offenses committed within the "special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States" includes both the general federal criminal law applicable elsewhere and additionally certain statutes which are uniquely applicable to such areas. As to the application of general federal criminal law, see United States v. Chapman, 321 F. Supp. 767 (E. Dist. Va. 1970). ("If Congress has enacted a statute which prohibits possession of marijuana, a person charged with such a crime committed at Washington National Airport must be prosecuted under the federal law.") Also see: Baily v. United States, 47 F. 2d 702 (9th Cir. 1931), which found that the predecessor to 18 U.S.C. §1152 made the law of smuggling applicable to Indian country if none of the exceptions specified in that statute apply.

Note that 18 U.S.C. §1152, set forth above, does not purport to incorporate state criminal law, but rather provides for the enforcement in Indian country of applicable existent federal criminal statutes. The federal courts have the additional power to enforce and prosecute thirteen (13) specified major crimes under the Major Crimes Act, 18 U.S.C. §1153.

Of the thirteen (13) specified major crimes, state law is utilized as to the definition of six (6) which are designated. State law is otherwise not applied. The state plays no role in law enforcement or prosecution relative to actions of Indians on Indian reservations. "The well-preserved general rule is that Indians are to be left free from state jurisdiction and control", U.S. ex rel. Feather, et al. v. Erickson, et al. (8th Cir. Nos. 73-1453-73-1459 and Nos. 73-1541-73-1543). McClanahan v. State Tax Commission of Arizona, ____ U.S. ____, 93 S. Ct. 1257 (1973). The respective tribal courts have jurisdiction to apply tribal law except as to the offenses enumerated in the Major Crimes Act.

In regard to the federal jurisdiction given by 18 U.S.C. §1152, note that this jurisdiction does not extend to the application of the specified federal criminal law where (1) offenses are committed by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian; (2) any Indian committing any offense in Indian country has been punished by the local law of the tribe, and (3) by treaty stipulations the exclusive jurisdiction over such offenses is or may be secured to the Indian tribes respectively.

18 U.S.C. §1152, although procedural in nature, has to be considered a criminal statute since it applies the provisions of criminal law, including penalties, against certain individuals. As a criminal statute, it must be interpreted in the light most favorable to the defendants. Thus, exceptions to the general criminal law applicability must be considered broadly in favor of inclusion of individuals within such exceptions who claim their benefit.

An analysis of each of these three exceptions becomes important as to whether the federal court has proper jurisdiction over the Wounded Knee defendants relative to each of the respective counts in the indictment. In the application of 18 U.S.C. §1152 to the instant case, such an analysis must of necessity be made.

The inherent sovereignty of the Indian nations and specifically that of the Oglala Sioux Tribe was recognized by the Eighth Circuit in Iron Crow v. Oglala Sioux Tribe, 231 F. 2d 89 (8th Cir. 1956), wherein the court stated:

We hold that Indian tribes, such as the defendant Oglala Sioux Tribe of the Pine Ridge Reservation, South Dakota, still possesses their inherent sovereignty excepting only where it has been specifically taken from them, either by treaty or by Congressional act."

Treaties between the U. S. and the various Indian tribes have been held to have the "same dignity as treaties with other foreign nations." (Cohen, Handbook on Federal Indian Law, Chapter 3.) This principle was originally established in 1872, has been confirmed by numerous federal court decisions, and has never been overturned. (Holden v. Joy, 17 Wall 211; Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515). As such, the treaties made with Indians are the "supreme law of the land." (Article IV § 2, U. S. Constitution) The method of dealing with Indians by treaty was abandoned with the Indian Appropriations Act of March 3, 1871, but this act expressly provided that treaties ratified prior to the date of enactment would have continuing validity.

In the time between the adoption of the Constitution and the cessation by statute of treaty-making as a practice in 1871, approximately 371 Indian treaties were effectuated. It has been ruled by the Supreme Court in Lone Wolf vs. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 553 (1903), that a treaty may be abrogated by statute. Although this concept can be challenged logically, it has been enunciated continually through the years. However, the U. S. Supreme Court has also continually stated: "The intention to abrogate or modify a treaty is not to be lightly imputed to Congress." Menominee Tribe of Indians v. United States, 391 U. S. 404 at 413 (1968); Pigeon River Company v. The Cox Company, 291 U. S. 138 (1934); Chew Heong v. United States, 112 U. S. 536; United States v. Payne, 264 U. S. 446.

A cardinal rule in the interpretation of Indian treaties is that ambiguities are to be resolved in favor of the Indians. Winters v. United States, 207 U. S. 564 (1908); Cohen Handbook of Federal Indian Law, pp. 37-38. As to the application of the rule, Winters, supra, at 776-777, states:

"the rule should certainly be applied to determine between two instances, one of which would support the purposes of the agreement and the other impair or defeat it."

The final treaty to which the Oglala Sioux were signatory is the Sioux Treaty of 1868 (April 29, 1868, 15 Stat. 635, ratified February 16, 1869, proclaimed February 24, 1869) sometimes called the Fort Laramie Treaty. This treaty ended the Red Cloud War which was brought about in part because the United States installed military forts on Indian lands and gave rights-of-way to railroads through Sioux land, despite the Indian disapproval of these actions which had caused severe impoverishment among the tribes in the region. The treaty was signed by Spotted Tail and the Brules with 24 chiefs joining on April 29, 1868. Nan Afraid and 39 of the Oglalas signed on May 25, 1868. Other chiefs signed on behalf of various bands during the ensuing months, with Red Cloud signing the treaty on November 6, 1868.

The treaty of 1868 is a culmination and final embodiment in treaty form of 50 years of national policy regarding the Oglala Sioux. The first treaty ratified between the United States and the Oglala Sioux was the treaty with the Sioune and Oglala Tribes, 1825, 7 Stat. 252. This treaty set forth the traditional recitations of friendship between the United States and the respective Indian tribes, provided for certain regulations as to trade, set forth prohibitions against individuals interfering with the friendship existing between the parties and specified the attention to such disruptions that would be applied to all parties. In 1865 a treaty was signed between the Oglala Band of the Sioux Nation and the United States, 1865, 14 Stat. 747. This treaty speaks of establishing peace and a policy of encouraging agricultural pursuits. The Treaty of 1868 can be seen as augmenting principles set forth within prior treaties. In regard to violations of lawful authority, the 1868 Treaty expands upon previous statements of respect and cooperation set forth within the Treaty of 1825 and provides, apparently in respect to the traditional Sioux methods of judgment, that an offender against the laws of the United States shall either be delivered to the United States officials or, in the alternative if such is not done, the person injured shall be reimbursed for his loss from annuities or monies to become due and owing to the tribe. The respect for this method of compensation for crimes can be seen both in Article I of the Treaty of 1868, specifying the above procedure, and in Article V providing for a judgmental process as to proper compensation amounts.

The Treaty of 1868 also guaranteed certain lands to the Sioux people forever, encompassing much of what is now western South Dakota (Section 2) provided for individual Indians to select lands for their own usage (Section 6) and provided for various payments and guarantees on both sides.

The Treaty of 1868, as specified above, had several provisions which relate to law enforcement. It provided that if bad men among the whites should commit any wrongs against the person or property of the Indians, the United States will cause the offender to be arrested and punished (Article I). It further provided that the Indians will deliver wrong-doers among their numbers to the United States to be tried and punished or if they refuse to do so, the person injured shall be reimbursed for his loss, from monies which become due under treaties (Article I). This latter clause, it was held in Ex Parte Crow Dog, 109 U. S. 556 (1883), did not depart from the general policy of the government towards Indians of allowing them to govern themselves. Such a departure, the court specified, would require a clear expression of the intention of Congress.

The Court also found that any duty by a signatory tribe to the Treaty of 1868 to deliver an offender to federal authorities did not extend to an alleged wrong committed by one Indian upon the person of another Indian.

In addition to Ex Parte Crow Dog, supra, the United States Supreme Court has had other occasions to interpret the Sioux Treaty of 1868. In all cases it found the treaty to be valid and to be effective. See, _____; Sioux Tribe of Indians v. United States, 316 U. S. 317, 62 S. Ct. 1096, 86 L. Ed. 1503 (1942); Leighton v. United States, 151 U. S. 291, 16 S. Ct. 496, 40 L. Ed. 705 (1896); Noonan v. Caledonia Mining Co., 121 U. S. 393 (1887); Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U. S. 94 (1884); Quick Bear v. Leupp, 210 U. S. 50 (1908); Donnelly v. United States, 228 U. S. 243 (1913); and Felix v. Patrick, 145 U. S. 317, 12 S. Ct. 886, 36 L. Ed. 725 (1892).

The case of Ex Parte Crow Dog which was decided by the Supreme Court in 1883, is quite important relative to the consideration of the federal court's jurisdiction over the Wounded Knee defendants. This is particularly so since the case involved an interpretation of the Sioux Treaty of 1868 and the criminal jurisdictional legislation which is now codified as 18 U.S.C. §1152. Also considered by the court was the Act of 1877 (19 Stat. at L. 254), where it is said "Congress shall, by appropriate legislation, secure to them an orderly government; that they shall be subject to the laws of the United States and each individual shall be protected in his right of property, person and life."

An application of the treaty and the respective statutes led to the court's decision that it had no jurisdiction to try Crow Dog for murder since the general policy of the United States has been uniform in the utilization by each tribe of its own customs and traditions in dealing with offenses of Indians against Indians. The court specified:

...offenses...by Indians against each other were left to be dealt with by each Tribe for itself, according to its local customs. The policy of the government in that respect has been uniform. As was said by Mr. Justice Miller, delivering the opinion of the court in U. S. v. Joseph, 94 U. S., 614, 617 [XXIV., 295, 297], 'The Tribes for whom the Act of 1854 was made were those semi-independent Tribes whom our government has always recognized as exempt from our laws, whether within or without the limits of an organized State or Territory and, in regard to their domestic government, left to their own rules and traditions, in whom we have recognized the capacity to make treaties, and with whom the governments, state and national, deal, with a few exceptions only, in their national or tribal character and not as individuals.'

Crow Dog had killed another Indian on Indian land and was punished according to tribal law, being forced to provide for the victim's family for the rest of his life. Dissatisfied by this result, the federal officials in the Territory of Dakota, brought charges against him, under the Federal Territorial Law in existence in the Territory of Dakota, and he was convicted of murder. The Supreme Court found that the federal court had no jurisdiction to try and convict Crow Dog. In dismissing contentions that the Treaty of 1868 and various cited legislation gave the court such jurisdiction, the Supreme Court spoke of the pledge by the United States:

...The pledge to secure to these people, with whom the United States was contracting as a distinct political body, an orderly government, by appropriate legislation thereafter to be framed and enacted, necessarily implies, having regard to all the circumstances attending the transaction, that among the arts of civilized life, which it was the very purpose of all these arrangements to introduce and naturalize among them, was the highest and best of all, that of self-government; the regulation by themselves of their own domestic affairs; the maintenance of order and peace among their own members by the administration of their own laws and customs. They were, nevertheless, to be subject to the laws of the United States, not in the sense of citizens, but, as they had always been, as wards subject to a guardian; not as individuals, constituted members of the political community of the United States, with a voice in the selection of representatives and the framing of the laws, but as a dependent community who were in a state of pupilage, advancing from the condition of a savage Tribe to that of a people who, through the discipline of labor and by education, it was hoped might become a self-supporting and self-governed society. The laws to which they were declared to be subject were the laws then existing, and which applied to them as Indians and, of course, included the very statute under consideration, which excepted from the operation of the general laws of the United States, otherwise applicable...

The emphasis which the court placed on the self-government and self-regulation of domestic affairs by the tribe should be noted.

Also of special note is the reliance that the court placed on Section 2145 and Section 2146 of Title XXVIII of the revised statutes in existence at that time. These sections have been now recodified as 18 U.S.C. §1152. The sections as they existed at the time read as follows:

Sec. 2145. Except as to crimes, the punishment of which is expressly provided for in this title, the general laws of the United States as to the punishment of crimes committed in any place within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, except the District of Columbia, shall extend to the Indian country.

Sec. 2146. The preceding section shall not be construed to extend to [crimes committed by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian, nor to] any Indian committing any offense in the Indian country who has been punished by the local law of the Tribe, or to any case where by treaty stipulations the exclusive jurisdiction over such offenses is or may be secured to the Indian Tribes respectively.

In its interpretation of the above statutes, the Supreme Court found that the federal courts of the United States had no jurisdiction over an alleged crime committed by one Indian against another Indian. This decision also implies that a lack of jurisdiction was also independently based on the fact that Crow Dog had been punished by the local law of the tribe and/or that the Treaty of 1868 provided for jurisdiction of such offenses to be reserved in the respective signatory Indian tribes. In regard to the latter treaty basis, it should be noted that the Supreme Court in Ex Parte Crow Dog, supra, spoke of the treaty as being reflective of the general policy of the government towards Indians in recognizing and fostering their own self-government and administration of their own laws and customs.

To find jurisdiction in the federal court to try the defendant for murder, the Court stated, "would be to reverse in this instance the general policy of the government towards Indians, as declared in many statutes and treaties and recognized in many decisions in this court, from the beginning to the present time." The court then emphasized that "to justify such a departure, in such a case, requires a clear expression of the intention of Congress and that we have not been able to find."

Ex Parte Crow Dog, supra, is still good law, having never been overruled. It has, in intervening years, been cited countless times with references being made by both the Supreme Court and by various other federal courts.

Presumably, the "clear expression" of Congressional intention which the Supreme Court in Ex Parte Crow Dog said would be necessary to justify a departure from acknowledging self-government by Indian tribes, was meant to be announced by Congress several years later in 1885 when it passed the Seven Major Crimes Act. This legislation brought under federal jurisdiction the crimes of murder, manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to kill, arson, burglary and larceny. The passage of the Seven Major Crimes Act was stirred by public indignation over the decision in Ex Parte Crow Dog. Keeble v. United States, ____ U.S. ____, 93 S. Ct. 1993 (1973), Cohen, supra, p. 147. In later years, notorious cases of robbery, incest and assault with a dangerous weapon resulted in the addition of these three offenses to the list of major crimes and the act became known as the Ten Major Crimes Act. (Act of March 4, 1909, Sec. 328, 35 Stat. 1088, 1151; Act of June 28, 1932, 47 Stat. 336, 337.) The federal government now has jurisdiction to try thirteen specified offenses which are now set forth at 18 U.S.C. §1153 in what is currently termed the "Major Crimes Act." The crimes now included are murder, manslaughter, rape, carnal knowledge, assault with intent to commit rape, incest, assault with intent to kill, assault with a dangerous weapon, assault resulting in serious bodily injury, arson, burglary, robbery and larceny.

These offenses committed within Indian country are made subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. A definition of Indian country is stated rather broadly at 18 U.S.C. §1152. The term "Indian Country" has a specific meaning given by the courts and the statute which clearly includes Indian reservations. The principal case on this is also Crow Dog, whose language has been adopted by statute (18 U.S.C. §1151). While the offense themselves are enforced through federal law, the Major Crimes Act provides that relative to certain of the offenses they shall be defined in accordance with the law of the state in which the offense was committed.

The Major Crimes Act as codified at 18 U.S.C. §1153, reads as follows:

§1153. Offenses committed within Indian country.

Any Indian who commits against the person or property of another Indian or another person any of the following offenses, namely, murder, manslaughter, rape, carnal knowledge of any female, not his wife, who has not attained the age of sixteen years, assault with intent to commit rape, incest, assault with intent to kill, assault with a dangerous weapon, assault resulting in serious bodily injury, arson, burglary, robbery, and larceny within the Indian country, shall be subject to the same laws and penalties as all other persons committing any of the above offenses, within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

As used in this section, the offense of rape and assault with intent to commit rape shall be defined in accordance with the laws of the State in which the offense was committed, and any Indian who commits the offenses of rape or assault with intent to commit rape upon any female Indian within the Indian country shall be imprisoned at the discretion of the court.

As used in this section, the offenses of burglary, assault with a dangerous weapon, assault resulting in serious bodily injury, and incest shall be defined and punished in accordance with the laws of the State in which such offense was committed. As amended May 24, 1949, c. 139 §26, 63 Stat. 94; Nov. 2, 1966, Pub. L. 89-707, §1, 80 Stat. 1100; April 11, 1968, Pub. L. 90-284, §501, 82 Stat. 80.

The validity of the Seven Major Crimes Act was upheld in United States v. Kagama, 118 U.S. 375, 6 S. Ct. 1109, 30 L. Ed. 228 (1886), largely on the basis that the constitutional authority of the United States to control commerce with the Indian tribes allowed for the control of behavior and enforcement of criminal legislation promulgated by Congress which relates to Indian tribes. The court spoke in terms of the Indian tribes being wards of the United States and found treaty arguments unpersuasive to the extent that treaties were urged as a basis for the unconstitutionality of the Major Crimes Act. A motion to dismiss the various charges arising out of the Wounded Knee indictments on the basis of the unconstitutionality of the Major Crimes Act was filed and recently argued to the court. It was argued that the Major Crimes Act was unconstitutional as violative of the Fifth Amendment. The court denied the motion to dismiss on this basis, citing Kills Crow v. United States, 452 F. 2d 323 (8th Cir. 1971) cert. den., 405 U.S. 999 (1972).

Kills Crow, supra, while finding the Major Crimes Act valid, does however, provide that 18 U.S.C. §1153, should be strictly construed and specifies that Indian tribal courts have inherent jurisdiction over all internal criminal matters not specifically taken over by the federal government. The Court in Kills Crow specified:

...it is axiomatic that statutes creating and defining crimes cannot be extended by intendment, and that no act, however wrongful, can lie punished under such a statute unless clearly within its terms. There can be no constructive offenses, and, before a man can be punished, his case must be plainly and unmistakably within the statute.

In United States v. LaPlant, 157 F. Supp. 660 (D.C. Mont. 1957), the Court specifically finds that jurisdiction over crimes not enumerated in §1153 is left to tribal courts.

It is clear, furthermore, from the legislative history to recent amendments to the Major Crimes Act, that Congressional understanding is that unless a crime is specified in the Major Crimes Act, the United States government has no jurisdiction over the offense of one Indian against another Indian since that prohibition is set forth in 18 U.S.C. §1152. (Report of the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary adopting report of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, U. S. Code Cong. and Admin. News 1966 p. 3654; remarks of Senator Sam Ervin, U. S. Code Cong. and Admin. News, 1968, p. 1866.)

It has been held relative to the Major Crimes Act that any portion of the tribal sovereignty which is carved out and for which punishment is provided under the Major Crimes Act must precisely fit the offense specified. A series of cases dealing with the question of whether the federal government had authority to prosecute for statutory rape or carnal knowledge of a minor, under authority of the "rape" provision of 18 U.S.C. §1153, is indicative of this principle. The court declined to find such jurisdiction in each of the following cases: United States v. Jacobs, 11 F. Supp. 203 (E. Dist. Wisc. 1953); United States v. Rider, 282 F. 2d 476 (9th Cir. 1960); and Petition of McCord, 151 F. Supp. 132 (D. Ala. 1957).

Finding that enforcement for statutory rape must, if at all, be punishable through 18 U.S.C. §1152, the court in Rider, supra, notes that the provision provides that an offense committed by one Indian against another Indian is not prosecutable under federal law:

... In recognition of the basic policy of Congress to allow an Indian tribe alone to deal with its members, 18 U.S.C.A. §1152, which makes applicable to the Indian Country the general penal laws of the United States, contains the qualifications that "[this] section shall not extend to offenses committed by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian." See, United States v. Quiver, 1915, 241 U.S. 602, 36 S.Ct. 699, 60 L.Ed. 1196.

The court's comments indicated above are, of course, as entirely applicable to the question of prior punishment by tribal authorities and to treaty commitments (the other exceptions contained within 18 U.S.C. §1152), as they are to the question of an offense by an Indian against another Indian, which was the fact situation with which the court was faced.

The court in Jacobs first gives an historical background of Section 1153, citing Worcester, Quiver and Crow Dog, emphasizing the point that the tribe's criminal jurisdiction derives from "inherent powers of tribal sovereignty which have never been extinguished." Then it reviews the legislative history of Section 1153 and finds that Congress did not intend to include carnal knowledge within its definition of "rape" when it left the definition of "rape" to state statute:

If Congress wanted to constitute carnal knowledge as an offense, it does not seem likely that it would have been done in the round-about way for which the government contends, when it could have been accomplished by the simple and direct method of allowing the words 'carnal knowledge' to remain as they were in the original bill. (11 F.Supp. at 207)

The Court continues and in referring to the principles set out in Ex Parte Crow Dog, supra, specified:

It may well be that the description of the Indian people in Ex Parte Crow Dog is no longer warranted, and that the time has come to make Indians subject to more of the laws governing other citizens or residents of the United States. But this is a matter for the legislature not the courts. It is for Congress to change a policy that has been long established and has been repeatedly recognized by the courts. (11 F.Supp. at 208)

The Court in Petition of McCord, 151 F.Supp. 132 (D.Ala., 1967), speaks of the deference which must be given to tribal authorities:

It is in the interest of further acquainting the members of the tribe with the society with which they must soon become members, it would certainly be injudicious to allow the petitioners to escape without any sanctions applied to them. However, the sanctions to be applied by the chief and the council must be left to the tribe, in the absence of Congressional action. United States v. Quiver, 1916, 241 U.S. 602.

Of the offenses charged in the indictments against Dennis Banks and Russell Means, only three counts specifically allege violations of the Major Crimes Act. These are Count I, charging breaking and entering with an intent to commit a larceny; Count II, charging the theft of personal property from the trading post at Wounded Knee; and Count VIII, alleging the theft of a 1970 Dodge from Cleve Gildersleeve. In Count I it is charged that the defendants violated the Major Crimes Act, apparently relative to burglary which is specified within the Major Crimes Act. It is provided that as to burglary, definition and punishment will be in accordance with state law. The state law cited, South Dakota Statute 22-32-9, does not relate to the classic definition of "burglary" as known and understood at the time of both the original passage of the Seven Major Crimes Act and the amendments thereto. Burglary is generally defined as "the breaking and entering of the house of another in the nighttime, with intent to commit a felony therein..." Black's Law Dictionary, West Publishing Co., 4th Ed. 1951, p. 247. Burglary defined accordingly is prohibited by specific South Dakota statutes which are not cited. The statute, however, under which the defendants are charged, is South Dakota Statute 22-32-9, entitled: "Breaking Curtilage-Vehicles." This statute does refer to breaking and entering with the requisite bad intent, but contains no requirement that such be shown to have been committed at night. The requirement that entry be made at night historically has been an important element of the crime of burglary and undoubtedly the offense was formulated and applied because of the special need of protection which individuals have when their normal senses are obscured by the spectre of darkness. In this regard, the deviation from the statutory definition of burglary which is herein presented by South Dakota Statute 22-32-9 is equivalent to the deviation from the standard definition of "rape" under which the courts in Rider, supra, Jacobs, supra, and McCord, supra, respectively declined to find jurisdiction over the offenses of "statutory rape" and "carnal knowledge of a minor."

Attention will now be directed toward the nine counts of the respective indictments specifying activity not prohibited under the Major Crimes Act. Presumably, the government believes that these offenses are properly chargeable through 18 U.S.C. §1152, discussed above, which specifies that the general criminal laws of the United States shall extend to Indian country. Yet this is the very argument which the U.S. Supreme Court rejected in Ex Parte Crow Dog, supra. There it found that in light of the historic purpose of recognizing self-government on an Indian reservation, there was no intent to depart from a full recognition of the tribal court as the body which would handle criminal offenses. In this regard the court found this historic purpose mandated not only by general national policy but also the exclusions contained within the predecessor section to 18 U.S.C. §1152, the application of other legislation, and the dictates of the Sioux Treaty of 1868. The Supreme Court specified that, should there be a departure from the general policy, a clear expression by Congress would have to be made. Since that time Congress has expressed itself through the Major Crimes Act. 18 U.S.C. §1152 is not new, but is a recodification of the pre-existing law in effect at the time Ex Parte Crow Dog was decided. The treaty scrutinized by the court is the same treaty under which the defendants claim benefit.

As indicated in the discussion above, when 18 U.S.C. §1152 is read in connection with 18 U.S.C. §1153, it appears that the crimes listed in 18 U.S.C. §1153 do constitute a Congressional determination that as to such specified crimes, the dictates of 18 U.S.C. §1152 do not apply. It is equally clear that all other alleged federal offenses are, indeed, subject to 18 U.S.C. §1152 and the exceptions contained therein.

An analysis in this regard is made by the court in Tooisah v. United States, 186 F.2d 93, wherein the court makes an historical analysis of the relationship of the two sections. It should be noted that Section 328 is the Ten Major Crimes Act, which is now, after additions, the Major Crimes Act, located at 18 U.S.C. §1153, and that Section 2146, as has been previously specified, is now located at 18 U.S.C. §1152. The court said:

But Section 2146 was not repealed by Section 328, except to the extent necessary to confer federal jurisdiction over certain enumerated crimes when committed by one Indian against another Indian in carefully specified places. Indeed, Section 2146 remained unchanged when it was recodified with Section 2145 as Section 1152 of the Revised Criminal Code, 18 U.S.C.A. It is therefore clear that the offense charged here is not cognizable in the Federal court under Section 2145 (now 1152), and the only question for decision is whether the asserted federal jurisdiction over the offense is sustainable under 328 as an offense of murder of one Indian by another 'on and within any Indian reservation under the jurisdiction of the United States Government.' (186 F.2d at 96)

18 U.S.C. §1152 exists today, as its predecessor did at the time of Ex Parte Crow Dog, as a limit upon the applicability of the federal criminal law upon an Indian reservation by stating it shall not be extended to (1) "offenses committed by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian;" (2) "to any Indian committing an offense in the Indian country who has been punished by the local law of the tribe;" and (3) to "any case where, by treaty stipulations, the exclusive jurisdiction over such offenses is or may be secured to the Indian tribes, respectively."

Each of the points above can be seen as an exception which is applicable to the Wounded Knee defendants.

It is incumbent upon this Court to analyze the exceptions to federal criminal jurisdictions provided for in 18 U.S.C. §1152 to determine their application to the case herein. Relative to the first exception, it appears that several of the counts of the respective indictments do involve offenses which encompass activity which may have been directed against Indian people. This is particularly true with respect to the conspiracy count and Count IX, and to the various counts alleging infractions associated with the Wounded Knee Trading Post and/or Cleve Gildersleeve and his wife, who have claimed to be part Indian. The Bureau of Indian Affairs generally defines "Indian" as being anybody who has one-fourth Indian blood.

Relative to the second exception specified at 18 U.S.C. §1152, punishment by the local law of the tribe must be interpreted in the broad sense since the range of punishment among Indian people encompasses a tradition of flexibility and individual application. Information will be presented to the court to show that both Russell Means and Dennis Banks were, because of their activities at Wounded Knee, ordered off and denied entrance privileges to the Pine Ridge Reservation of the Oglala Sioux by tribal authority. The right of these defendants to be present at the reservation is of prime importance to both of them and their exclusion must be taken to be very much in the nature of punishment. In regard to Russell Means, this "banishment" is particularly oppressive since Mr. Means, a member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, was denied access to his home and has found that his campaign for tribal chairman was compromised.

The possible double jeopardy implications inherent in situations where both the federal and tribal courts have jurisdiction over offenses are discussed by William F. Clayton, currently U.S. District Attorney for the District of South Dakota, in a law review article entitled, "Indian Jurisdiction and Related Double Jeopardy Questions," appearing at 17 South Dakota Law Review 343. In his article, Clayton specifies that the "prevailing legal theory" is that "except where withdrawn by Congress in the exercise of its plenary powers over Indian affairs, jurisdiction of criminal offenses by Indians in the Indian country rests with the Indian tribe." See also, Glover v. United States, 219 F.Supp. 19 (D. Mont., 1963). He specifies that "concerning Indian tribal jurisdiction, the rule of law is that Indian courts have considerable jurisdiction and such jurisdiction is, to a large extent, exclusive." See also, Colliflower v. Garland, 342 F.2d 369 (9th Cir., 1965).

In United States v. LaPlant, supra, the court, in finding that a defendant in a federal criminal case had been previously punished by action of the tribe, dismissed the federal action. The courts find that the tribe, with the exception of the offenses specified in the Major Crimes Act, does have jurisdiction over criminal offenses. In referring to the fact of tribal punishment having occurred, the court specifies: "...This alone would appear sufficient under the statute to warrant a dismissal of the informations, absent any question of double jeopardy." The actual role of a tribal court will be further considered at a later point.

The third exception contained in 18 U.S.C. §1152 to general federal criminal jurisdiction on reservations is where by treaty stipulation the exclusive jurisdiction over such offenses is or may be secured to the Indian tribes effectively. As discussed above, Ex Parte Crow Dog reads the 1868 Treaty in the context of the general policy of the United States of recognizing the inherent self-government rights of an Indian tribe. The court found that the Treaty of 1868 constituted a "pledge to secure to these people with whom the United States was contracting as a distinct political body, an orderly government,...[which] necessarily implies,...that of self-government: The regulation by themselves of their own domestic affairs; the maintenance of order and peace among their own members by the administration of their own laws and customs." This, the court specified, was "the highest and best of all" of the "arts of civilized life."

Given this reading of the Treaty of 1868, it would indeed appear that self-government as to criminal jurisdiction was reserved in the tribe by that treaty as to the offenses which are now embraced in 18 U.S.C. §1152. This leads to the inescapable conclusion that except as to those offenses properly charged under the Major Crimes Act, the court has no criminal jurisdiction over the defendants.

In regard to the treaty exception, 18 U.S.C. §1152 specifies that the federal court would not have jurisdiction where by treaty stipulations the exclusive jurisdiction over particular offenses "is or may be secured to the Indian tribes, respectively." (Emphasis added) This would seem to indicate that should treaty language be unclear, the treaty should be interpreted as specifying criminal jurisdiction with the Indian tribe and not with the federal courts. This would be consistent with the general policy cited above that interpretation of Indian treaties is to be resolved in favor of the Indians.

Winters v. United States, 207 U.S. 554 (1908).

In 1825 the Assimilative Crimes Act was enacted which is now codified at 18 U.S.C. §13. This act adopts state criminal law for areas of federal jurisdiction within the boundaries of each state and reads as follows:

Whoever within or upon any of the places now existing or hereafter reserved or acquired as provided in section 7 of this title, is guilty of any act or omission which, although not made punishable by any enactment of Congress, would be punishable if committed or omitted within the jurisdiction of the State, Territory, Possession, or District in which such place is situated, by the laws thereof in force at the time of such act or omission, shall be guilty of a like offense and subject to a like punishment.

The places 'reserved or acquired as provided in section 7' include:

Any lands reserved or acquired for the use of the United States, and under the exclusive or concurrent jurisdiction thereof...[18 U.S.C. §7(3) (1952)]

Indian reservations are generally held to be within this category of lands. Guith v. United States, 320 F.2d 481 (9th Cir., 1956). It was not until Williams v. United States, 327 U.S. 711 (1946) was decided that the Assimilative Crimes Act was applied to Indian offenses.

The Assimilative Crimes Act in effect bestows on the states jurisdiction to define crimes, while leaving unaffected the question of court jurisdiction to apprehend, try and punish individuals for crimes defined by the state legislation. A crime under state law, however, will not be assimilated if there is an express prohibition of the same act in the federal codes. Williams v. United States, supra. The specific federal law will then override the general reference to the state law contained in the Assimilative Crimes Act.

In enacting 18 U.S.C. §13 in 1948 as part of the general revision of the Federal Criminal Code, the intent of Congress was merely to recodify existing criminal law and not make changes in the federal-state relation. See H.R. Repp. No. 304, 80th Cong., 1st Sess. (1947), cited in Notes to 18 U.S.C.A. §13. The Assimilative Crimes Act assimilates only such state laws that are not contrary to federal policy. See, Air Terminal Services, Inc. v. Rentzel, 81 F.Supp. 611 (E.D.B.A., 1949), state laws in conflict with valid federal administrative regulations are not assimilated; and Hunt v. United States, 278 U.S. 96 (1928), indicating the limited nature of the applicability of the Assimilative Crimes Act. "In this regard it should be noted that the Assimilative Crimes Act does not apply to situations where the extension to Indian country of the general laws of the United States for federal enclaves is specifically removed by the second paragraph of Section 1152." Clayton, "Indian Jurisdiction and Related Double Jeopardy Questions," 17 S.D.L. Rev. 343. Thus, any state crimes which would be excluded by 18 U.S.C. §1152 would not be assimilated into federal jurisdiction on Indian reservations. Thus, 18 U.S.C. §13 can apply no wider jurisdictional base than that analyzed relative to 18 U.S.C. §1152.

It should be noted that under the rules of statutory construction:

...Where there are two statutes upon the same subject, the earlier being special and the later general, the presumption is, in the absence of an express repeal, or an absolute incompatibility, that the special is intended to remain in force as an exception to the general. (General Electric Credit Corp. v. James Talcott, Inc., 271 F.Supp. 699, 706 (1966))

See also, Rodgers v. United States, 185 U.S. 83 (1902); and United States v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 220 F.Supp. 144 (1963).

In the instant case, this rule of statutory construction means that the three specific exceptions enumerated in 18 U.S.C. §1152 retain their full force to modify or exclude jurisdiction that is granted by other federal statutes such as 18 U.S.C. §13 (the Assimilative Crimes Act). The purpose of this rule of statutory construction is to give effect to the established general policy of the government unless Congress has clearly mandated a repeal. Ex Parte Crow Dog, supra; La Vergne v. U.S. Casualty Co., 259 F.Supp. 425 (1966); Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Rivera's Estate, 214 F.2d 601 (1954); Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Bilder, 289 F.2d 291 (1961). Here, the established governmental policy has been one of recognizing tribal jurisdiction over criminal actions committed on Indian country by Indians unless there has been express Congressional action granting jurisdiction over criminal actions to the federal courts as in the Major Crimes Act, 18 U.S.C. §1153.

This constriction of jurisdictional base according to the dictates of 18 U.S.C. §1152 is particularized in Acunia v. United States, 404 F.2d 140, wherein the court specifies:

It is clear that Congress did not intend that the Assimilative Crimes Act should apply to situations wherein under the second paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §1152 the extension to Indian country of a general caluse of the United States for federal enclaves is specifically removed.

The court further explained:

...We think it is clear that unless there is present one of the three conditions provided by 1152 to exempt an Indian from liability for offenses under the general laws of the United States to which he is subject by virtue of 1152, that section is effective to render him amenable to such general laws including or as enlarged by Assimilative Crimes Act.

Finding further proof that the exceptions contained with 18 U.S.C. §1152 are fully applicable to any utilization of the Assimilative Crimes Act on Indian reservations the court specifies: "If the Assimilative Crimes Act had not been excepted by the second paragraph of 1152, it would have been unnecessary for Congress to make reference in section 1153 to state law concerning the offenses of rape and burglary."

An opinion of the solicitor of the Department of the Interior rendered in 1934 ("Powers of Indian Tribes," October 25, 1934, 55 I.D. 14) sums up the powers of an Indian tribe relative to the administration of law and order and the conduct of tribal courts in the following terms:

So long as the complete and independent sovereignty of an Indian tribe was recognized, its criminal jurisdiction, no less than its civil jurisdiction, was that of any sovereign power. It might punish the subjects for offenses against each other or against aliens and for public offenses against the peace and dignity of the tribe. Similarly, it might punish aliens within its jurisdiction according to its own laws and customs. Such jurisdiction continues to this day, save as it has been expressly limited by the acts of a superior government.

Recognition of tribal authority in the administration of justice is found in the statutes of Congress, as well as in the decisions of the federal courts.

U.S. Code, Title 25, Section 229, provides that redress for a civil injury committed by an Indian shall be sought in the first instance from the 'Nation or tribe to which such Indian shall belong.' This provision for collective responsibility evidently assumes that the Indian tribe or Nation has its own resources for exercising disciplinary power over individual wrongdoers within the community.

We have already referred to U.S. Code, Title 25, Section 218, with its express assurance that persons 'punished by the law of the tribe' shall not be tried again before the federal courts.

What is even more important than these statutory recognitions of tribal criminal authority is the persistent silence of Congress on the general problem of Indian criminal jurisdiction. There is nothing to justify an alternative to the conclusion that the Indian tribes retain sovereignty and jurisdiction over a vast area of ordinary offenses over which the federal government has never presumed to legislate and over which the state governments have not the authority to legislate.

The attempts of the Interior Department to administer a rough-and-ready sort of justice through Courts of Indian Offenses, or directly through superintendents, cannot be held to have impaired tribal authority in the field of law and order. These agencies have been characterized, in the only reported cases squarely upholding their legality, as 'mere educational and disciplinary instrumentalities by which the government of the United States is endeavoring to improve and elevate the condition of these dependent tribes to whom it sustains the relation of guardian.' (United States v. Clapox, 35 Fed. 575; and cf. Ex parte Bi-a-lil-le, 12 Ariz. 150, 110 Pac. 450; United States v. Van Wert, 195 Fed. 974). Perhaps a more satisfactory defense of their legality is the doctrine put forward by a recent writer that the Courts of Indian Offenses 'derive their authority from the tribe, rather than from Washington.'

Whichever of these explanations be offered for the existence of the Courts of Indian Offenses, their establishment cannot be held to have destroyed or limited the powers vested by existing law in the Indian tribes over the province of law and order and the administration of civil and criminal justice.

The Indian Reorganization Act of 1934 provides for the operation of Courts of Indian Offenses by Indian tribes who become organized under the Reorganization Act. The Code of Federal Regulations, Title 25, part 11, also provides for such a court. Both the Indian Reorganization Act and the Code of Federal Regulations provide that a tribe may enact ordinances prescribing crimes. A six-month maximum penalty is specified.

It is thus recognized both historically and in modern codes that upon an Indian reservation single jurisdiction over many crimes is a tribal court. The revised Code of the Oglala Sioux Tribe in Chapter 1, Section 1, sets forth its jurisdiction over persons. It specifies:

The Oglala Sioux Tribal Court of the Pine Ridge Reservation shall have jurisdiction over all offenses when committed by a member of the tribe, by non-member Indians who are members of any recognized tribe under federal jurisdiction, or by any other person consenting to jurisdiction, as hereinafter provided.

It is clear that both the defendants, Mr. Means as a member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe and Mr. Banks as a non-member Indian who is a member of a recognized tribe (Chippewa), are individuals over whom jurisdiction is asserted by the Oglala Sioux in their revised code.

It should be noted that in Section 1.1 of the Revised Code of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, it is provided that "with respect to any of the offenses enumerated in Chapter 6 over which the federal or state court may have lawful jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of the Oglala Sioux Tribal Court shall be concurrent and not exclusive." This, of course, makes no judgmental assessment as to whether the federal or state courts do have lawful jurisdiction in a particular matter. As indicated above, the Major Crimes Act has been found to give the federal courts lawful jurisdiction relative to the offenses specified therein. A review of the offenses set forth in Chapter 6 indicates that conduct violative of certain of the offenses set forth therein might also give rise to a violation of one of the crimes specified within the Major Crimes Act, i.e., the Tribal Code forbids "theft", which can be taken to be akin to "larceny."

The fact that the defendants have not been charged by the Oglala Tribal Court with various offenses over which the Tribal Court has jurisdiction cannot be deemed to constitute a forfeiture of their responsibility. It may well indicate that they are not aware of a sufficient quantum of evidence which would indicate that the defendants are, indeed, guilty of anything.

In analyzing the proper role of the tribal court for the Oglala Sioux, the case of Iron Crow v. Oglala Sioux Tribe, 231 F. 2d 89 (8th Cir. 1955) is vital. In this case, several individuals convicted of adultery by the tribal court brought an action to enjoin the tribe and its officers from enforcing the penal decrees of the court on the ground that the tribal court did not have jurisdiction. They maintained further that the tribal court was a recent creation foisted upon members of the tribe through adoption of its constitution. The tribe maintained that its tribal court derived powers as a necessary attribute of the original tribal sovereignty which is recognized in the Constitution of the United States and in the various treaties. Additionally, the tribe asserted that its tribal court had jurisdiction on the basis of various federal statutes enacted by Congress pursuant to powers vested in it by the constitutional clause allowing Congress to govern commerce among the Indian tribes.

Disputing that the tribal court was a recent creation, the court stated that "no substantial change appears to have been made in the operation of the Indian court from 1892 until 1935."

The Eighth Circuit, in rather strong language, agreed with both of the arguments presented by the Oglala Sioux Tribe. The court stated: "[F]rom time immemorial, the members of the Oglala Sioux Tribe have exercised powers of local self-government, regulating domestic problems and conducting foreign affairs, including in latter years, the negotiation of treaties and agreements with the United States." (Emphasis added)

The court, in reviewing Congressional action relative to the maintenance of Indian courts, concluded that "there can be little doubt...that Congress has actually authorized the establishment and operation of the Oglala Sioux Tribal Court."

In speaking of both the inherent sovereignty of the tribe and federal legislative support of the tribal courts, the court in Iron Crow, supra, specifies:

The plaintiff would argue that there is found no provision in the Federal Constitution for Indian courts. None is necessary. As already indicated, the Constitution, by authorizing Congress to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes and by authorizing the making of treaties with them, while not in and of itself establishing the sovereignty of the tribes, nevertheless does recognize their sovereignty. As interpreted by the United States Supreme Court, that sovereignty is absolute excepting only as to such rights as are taken away by the paramount government, the United States. Under this view, not even a Congressional Act would be necessary to establish the legality of the Oglala Sioux Tribal Courts. However, regulatory powers over these judicial establishments have been exercised to promote uniformity, gradual assimilation and other ends....

Originally and until 1885, all offenses committed by Indians against Indians within the confines of Indian country were under the jurisdiction of the Tribal Courts. In 1885 Congress passed what is sometimes referred to as the 'Seven Major Crimes Act.' Therein, 23 Stat. 362, 385, March 3, 1885, Ch. 341, Sec. 9, 18 U.S.C.A. §548, Congress brought under federal jurisdiction the crimes of murder, manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to kill, arson, burglary and larceny. Subsequently three additional crimes were included, to-wit: incest, assault with a dangerous weapon and robbery. The clear inference is that Congress left to the Indian Tribal Courts jurisdiction over all crimes not taken by the federal government, but that federal legislative action and rules promulgated thereunder support the authority of the Tribal Courts.

The Eighth Circuit had occasion again to speak to the special role that tribal courts play relative to offenses by "indians on Indian reservations" in Kills Crow v. United States, 451 F.2d 323 (1971). In that case it was argued that the racial classification to which the Major Crimes Act was directed was unconstitutional. The court rejected that argument, stating: "[W]e conclude ...that distinctions created through Congressional restraint in enacting Indian criminal legislation are neither invidious nor capricious and are, in fact, generally beneficial to Indians. This is basically so because Indian tribal courts have inherent jurisdiction over all internal criminal matters not taken over by the federal government." (Emphasis added) The Court proceeded to comment upon "the centrality of Tribal Courts to the preservation of Indian identity and to the proper and effective administration of justice on the reservation."

As has been specified above, the only criminal matters taken over by the federal government with respect to possible offenses by Indians on the Oglala Sioux Reservation are those specified in the Major Crimes Act.

Kills Crow, supra, is instructive on other points. The appellant contended that the trial court erred in refusing to give a jury instruction of simple assault, as a lesser crime, when he was charged with assault with a dangerous weapon. The court held that no error was committed since 18 U.S.C. §1153 is not sufficiently broad in scope to vest in the district court jurisdiction to consider and instruct upon the crime of assault. The Eighth Circuit specified that "the Major Crimes Act recognizes only aggravated assault, and one looks in vain for another statute conferring jurisdiction upon federal courts to convict Indians of simple assault, at least where the offense is alleged to have been committed on a reservation." While the due process implication of the lack of a lesser instruction are questionable, this aspect of the decision is important in showing that the specified major crimes have a specific identity and are not expandable beyond the common understanding of the specific offense. See also United States v. Davis, 429 F.2d 552 (8th Cir. 1970).

The due process implications in refusing, upon the request of a defendant, to give an instruction to what would normally be a lesser and included offense are addressed by the United States Supreme Court in Keeble v. United States, _____ U. S. _____, 93 S. Ct. 1993 (1973). The court therein found the failure to give such an instruction to be a denial of due process as to Indian people, since in many situations a jury might convict an individual of a lesser offense where, if it did not have that option, he might be convicted of the more serious offense. The court did not specify whether the conviction of a lesser offense, i.e., assault, would then be punishable or not by a federal court. It is important to note that in this decision the Supreme Court again comments upon the limited offenses contained within the Major Crimes Act and cautions against the infringement upon the residual jurisdiction of an Indian tribe by permitting federal court prosecutions that are not authorized. The court specifies:

Finally, we emphasize that our decision today neither expands the reach of the Major Crimes Act nor permits the Government to infringe the residual jurisdiction of the Tribe by bringing prosecutions in federal court that are not authorized by statute.

In commenting upon the limitation of federal court jurisdiction, the South Dakota Law Review in an article entitled, "Federal Jurisdiction Over Criminal Matters Involving Indians," by Clifford Richards, appearing at 2 South Dakota Law Review 52 comments: "It is interesting to observe that federal jurisdiction based upon Indians and Indian reservations is strictly limited to the ten major crimes and that in applying the statute the Indian defendant is always given the benefit of the doubt."

In holding that the Montana state courts did not have jurisdiction over charges of forgery alleged to have occurred within the boundaries of an Indian reservation, the Montana Supreme Court in State ex rel Bokas v. District Court, 108 Mont. 37, 270 P. 2d 396 (1954), referred to the Major Crimes Act and then correctly specified, "For those lesser crimes not cognizable by Congress, the last paragraph of §1152, Title 18, U.S.A. applies."

As to offenses not specified within the Major Crimes Act, it has been held by the Supreme Court in United States v. Quiver, 241 U.S. 602 (1960), that there is no statute of the United States applicable and that an Indian engaging in such activity which may be thought objectionable by many people nevertheless does not violate any law of the United States. The court specified that the standard that must be applied is that "the relations of the Indians among themselves--the conduct of one toward another--is to be controlled by the customs and laws of the tribe, save when Congress expressly or clearly directs otherwise," and that "the enumeration in the Acts of 1885 and 1903 (Major Crimes Acts, now 18 U.S.C.A. §1153) of certain offenses as applicable to Indians in the reservations carries with it some implication of a purpose to exclude others."

The endurance and current applicability of Indian treaties has been recently specified by the Supreme Court in Menominee Tribe of Indians v. United States, 391 U.S. 404. The Menominee had been subjected to Congressional termination of their identity as a federally recognized tribe pursuant to the Termination Act of 1953. The Menominee found themselves subsequently being told that their fishing and hunting rights had been abrogated by the Termination Act.

The Treaty of 1854 to which the Menominee were a party specified that their lands were "to be held as Indian lands are held." The Supreme Court said that although it was not expressly stated, to hold lands as Indian lands are held includes the right to hunt and fish. It further held that the Termination Act could not be a backhanded way of abrogating treaty rights specifying that "the intention to abrogate or modify a treaty is not to be lightly imputed to the Congress."

On December 7, 1973, citing Menominee, supra, the Eighth Circuit retreated from a formerly adopted position and showed a renewed concern with Indian rights. In United States ex rel. Feather, et al. v. Erickson, et al., supra, the court, recognizing the lack of state jurisdiction within the confines of an Indian reservation, vacated at least ten convictions of Indians who were found guilty of various state offenses. The Eighth Circuit noted that in DeMarrias v. State of South Dakota, 319 F.2d 845 (1963), it had ruled that land within the original boundaries of the Lake Traverse Reservation should not be considered Indian country, since much of the reservation was opened for non-Indian settlements following the passage of the General Allotment Act. In DeMarrias, the Eighth Circuit specified that such non-Indian settlement within the reservation showed a Congressional intent to restore the land to public domain, thereby removing it from the category of Indian country. In its recent decision in United States ex rel. Feather, the court reversed itself, stating that recent decisions now make it clear that there have never been any clear expressions by Congress to disestablish the reservation, established by treaty as being permanent. United States ex rel. Feather forcefully presents a recent Eighth Circuit recognition that there are very real limits to criminal jurisdiction upon Indians on an Indian reservation and that further, such criminal jurisdictional authority must be clearly specified and not assumed.

In the above discussion it can be seen that criminal jurisdiction on the Oglala Sioux Reservation is appropriately within U.S. District Court only in regard to those offenses specified in the Major Crimes Act, 18 U.S.C. §1153; and that proper criminal jurisdiction as to all other activities rests exclusively with the Oglala Sioux.

The motion of defendants for dismissal of the respective specified charges should be granted..

AUSA HURD, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, attorney representing the government in the trial of RUSSELL MEANS and DENNIS BANKS at St. Paul, Minnesota, furnished copy of motion filed by attorneys for MEANS and BANKS with the U. It is anticipated that because of above and other demands that there will be extensive investigation required as a result of this affidavit. Therefore, the separate sub file, 70-6832-SUB BB, is being opened as a control file. Copies of the motion are being placed in 70-6864 (BANKS), 70-6832 (MEANS), 70-6832-SUB P, and 70-6832-SUB BB.

On 1/14/74, Mr. HUMB advised that no decision will be made at this time by Judge FRED NICHOL, U. S. District Court of South Dakota, at St. Paul, Minnesota, regarding this motion. The USA's Office advised Judge NICHOL that the Government is not in a position to respond at this time and Mr. HUMB stated he does not anticipate any action to be taken on the motion in the near future; certainly until at least after the Government rests. He is hopeful that the judge will dismiss the motion without requiring an evidentiary hearing. He stated, however, that he could not predict at this time the date of any hearing or the extent of the hearings which might be required by Judge NICHOL. He stated, however, that the court might "lean over backwards" to listen to defense arguments because of the nature of the trial. He stated that he had given the motion a " cursory" review and believed that there is little new regarding legal issues that has not been previously favorably ruled on by the court. The affidavit to dismiss is partially based on the hearings of the motions re DAVID HILL vs. ROBERT SANDS, ET AL (motions to remove cases in state court arising out of violations at Custer, South Dakota to the federal court); and for BRIM vs. WILSON (motion re legality of tribal action re barring of non-residents from Wounded Knee) ^{which} have been ~~not been~~ transcribed.

1Date of transcription December 21, 1973

I recall that during the early morning hours of February 28, 1973, I asked the Superintendent of the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, STANLEY LYMAN, to see if he could have a plane available for me at dawn in order that I could check the area at that time. He was able to make this arrangement; and, shortly after dawn, on February 28, 1973, WILLIAM HALL of the U. S. Marshal's Service joined me in flying over Wounded Knee in a private aircraft. Prior to boarding the aircraft, I believe someone told me that an airplane used by a representative of the media had attempted to fly low over Wounded Knee, and the airplane was shot at. Accordingly, I cautioned the pilot of our airplane to fly at a sufficient height so we would not be hit by small arms fire.

Sometime later that day, after returning to the Command Post at Pine Ridge, I believe someone mentioned to me that there were rifle shots fired from within Wounded Knee at the airplane that I was using. I do not know who told me this, nor do I know the basis for this statement. To my knowledge, there were no bullet holes in the airplane.

A large group of Indians were present at the above described gathering. [redacted] recalled that DENNIS BANKS, RUSSELL MEANS, PADRO BISSETTO, LEONARD CROW DOG, and VERNON LONG participated in the discussion on this occasion, together with others whose identity she did not recollect.
